

In The House Of Commons

Susan Kadis, M.P., Thornhill

February 27, 2007

Mrs. Susan Kadis (Thornhill, Lib.): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative government killed the court challenges program, shut down the law commission and refuses to fund women's groups that do advocacy work.

The government falsely claims it stands up for women's equality but prohibits groups advocating for equality from getting the money that they need for their work.

Why does the government fund some advocacy groups, its favourites, but deliberately discriminates against women?
